collation

Collationner: comparer et noter les différences entre deux états génétiques ou deux versions imprimées d'un texte (Grésillon 1994, 242).

Kollation (lat. collatio 'Zusammentragen') Vergleich von Texten verschiedener Textträger um Übereinstimmungen und Abweichungen eines Textes zu ermitteln (Plachta 1997, 137).

Collation. Character-by-character comparison of two or more texts. Traditionally, the process by which editors isolate patterns of error that indicate transcriptional descent, to determine whether one or more texts is a copy made from an earlier and thus more reliable copy. Some twentieth-century editors have used the term to describe the process of visual comparison by which transcriptions, galleys, etc. are checked for error. With modern technology, the “compare” function in word-processing software performs this function by comparing the machine-readable versions of galleys and page proofs against each other (Kline 1998, 270).

Il ne s'agit ni du même univers (avant et après l'imprimerie), ni d'une même projet (écrire, copier), ni de la même démarche (créer, reproduire), ni du même objet (des brouillons, la copie d'un texte), etc.

(de Biasi 2000, 19)

comment parler de 'variantes' en l'absence de tout invariant?

Contribute

Without pretending to be exhaustive, this Lexicon of Scholarly Editing tries to be as thorough as possible by offering you the opportunity to contribute whenever you find a definition (or new entry) that may be added to the lexicon. There are basically two ways to contribute: (1) either you suggest a definition by completing our contact form; or (2) by registering as a contributor and following our guidelines for entering definitions in our WordPress CMS environment.

Whatever method you choose, we would like to thank you in advance for helping to expand the lexicon. We will take all definitions into consideration, and will update the lexicon as soon as possible. Afterwards, the new updates will be added to our News Blog, to which you can subscribe here, and we will update our Credits Page as well.
